The stories of this second collection (issues #6-10) improve compared to the rather lacking first collection, even with Al Ewing as a writer (whom I didn't rate highly in the first collection). I'll be discussing the artwork in this collection first. Simon Fraser's drawing has grown a bit on me but I still don't rate him very highly. However, I loved Simon's imagination of the TARDIS interiors beyond the console room in Chapter 3! He still needs to work on improving his drawing of tears rolling down cheeks! I believe Simon is fortunate to have Gary Caldwell on board because his coloring compliments Simon's art very well. As for Warren Fleece's art, I liked his artwork. He seems to employ his drawing in an old style way, similar to comic books of the 50s and 60s. Hi-Fi's coloring compliments Fleece's art very well - much better than coloring for Boo Cook. Fleece does produce some very nice full page images and his two-page spread of the wormhole was wonderful! Boo Cook's art: still too clean for my liking and he really needs to find another colorist that would do his art justice, not Hi-Fi. One thing I did not like about the art throughout the collection was that the drawing of Jones. His likeness was very inconsistent. In one story, he's a redhead. In another, he's a blonde. It's as if Jones is a shapeshifter but he is not!As for the stories:Chapter 6: I've liked Rob Williams' story in Chapter 3 from the previous collection and he doesn't disappoint in this one. Admittedly, I've found the story a bit confusing but that's due to the time-leaping-backwards nature of the story. Nevertheless, it made an interesting and entertaining story.Chapter 7 and 8: Chapter 7 is written by Rob Williams and Chapter 8 by Al Ewing.
